ROBERT J. WOODSFORD,

Plaintiff,

v.

FRIENDLY FORD, a Nevada Corporation, et al.,

Defendants.

Case No. 2:10-cv-01996-MMD-VCF

ORDER

23)

I. SUMMARY

Before the Court is Defendant Friendly Ford's Motion for Summary Judgment. (Dkt. no. 23.) For the reasons set forth below, the Court grants the motion in part and denies it in part.

II. BACKGROUND

Except where stated, the following facts appear without dispute in the summary judgment record. Plaintiff Robert Woodsford began working at Defendant Friendly Ford ("Friendly") in May 1984. Friendly was founded by its current chairman, Edward Olliges, in 1970. It is a Ford Motors dealership and service shop. By August 2008, the time of the first alleged act of discrimination, Woodsford was senior shop foreman and 67 years of age.

As of August 29, 2008, Woodsford received a monthly salary of $1800 plus a commission of 2.50% on the selling gross for parts and service. Woodsford's

1 compensation under this pay plan from 2005-2008 was between $150,000 and $171,000 2 per year.

3 In summer 2008, Friendly was in the midst of a downturn in business and made 4 numerous cuts in personnel and expenditures. Fifteen employees were laid off between 5 August and September of that year. Woodsford's supervisor and the service director, 6 Greg Haase, asked Woodsford to reduce costs in his department.

7 Earlier in 2008, Haase had conducted a survey of the average pay for shop
8 foremen at Las Vegas car dealerships. Haase came to the conclusion that Woodsford 9 made substantially over market, with other shop foremen making between $70,000 to 10 $90,000. In fact, Jerry Penland, the former senior shop foreman, had previously spoken 11 to Woodsford and Haase about management costs being too high.

12 Over the course of Woodsford's employment, he and Olliges had several 13 conversations in which Woodsford discussed his plans to buy a motorhome to use in 14 retirement. (Dkt. no. 23-1 at 11.) Invariably during these conversations, Olliges asked 15 Woodsford when he planned on retiring. (Id.) In fact, Woodsford had previously told co-16 workers that he planned on retiring at age 66. (Dkt. no. 28-1 at 8.) But in 2008, 17 Woodsford informed Olliges that he was not going to be able to retire in the near future 18 for personal reasons. (Id.) Later, on or about August 1, 2008, Woodsford claims that 19 Olliges asked Woodsford whether or not he was planning on retiring as he was 20 approaching 67 years old.<sup>1</sup> Woodsford responded that he had no plans on retiring for 21 another "couple" of years.

22 On August 29, 2008, Haase informed Woodsford that he was reducing 23 Woodsford's commission to 1.5% because Woodsford "made too much money."

25 <sup>1</sup> Defendant denies that Olliges asked Woodsford directly when Woodsford 26 planned on retiring. Instead, Defendant claims that when Woodsford brought up his 27 retirement in Olliges' presence, Olliges would ask "when?" However, "[i]n evaluating a 28 summary judgment motion, a court views all facts and draws all inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party." Kaiser Cement Corp. v. Fishbach & Moore, Inc., 793 F.2d 1100, 1103 (9th Cir. 1986). Thus, the Court assumes Woodsford's version of this fact.

1 Defendant did not alter Woodsford's job duties; the only change was to his 2 compensation. Woodsford signed documents agreeing to reduce his commission to 3 1.5% with an increase in his monthly salary to $2000 on August 29. Woodsford later 4 had second thoughts and requested meetings with Haase and Olliges to discuss the 5 changes. Woodsford protested what he perceived to be a steep cut in his compensation 6 and asked for a less significant reduction. Woodsford also asked the men if the pay cut 7 was Defendant's method of pushing Woodsford to retire; Olliges responded that the pay 8 cut was because Friendly paid Woodsford too much. After the meeting, Haase and 9 Olliges agreed to modify Woodsford's base salary to $2500 per month, informing 10 Woodsford that if he did not agree to this number, Friendly management would eliminate 11 his position. On September 3, Woodsford signed a new pay plan providing for 1.5% 12 commission and a salary of $2500 per month. Haase asked Woodsford not to discuss 13 the changes to his compensation with other Friendly employees.

14 Woodsford took a vacation after the change in his salary. While on vacation, on 15 September 9, he filed a charge with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission 16 ("EEOC") alleging age discrimination ("the EEOC charge"). Woodsford believed that 17 because he was the oldest manager and the only manager whose pay had been cut, 18 Friendly was attempting to induce him to retire. Defendant learned about the charge on 19 September 9.

20 Back at work on September 15, Woodsford met with Haase and Dennis Young, 21 Friendly's Director of Human Resources. Young informed Woodsford that Friendly was 22 aware of the EEOC filing. He asked that Woodsford not discuss his pay cut or the 23 charge with other friendly employees.<sup>2</sup> Woodsford protested this, saying that his 24 compensation change and EEOC charge were "absolutely everybody's business."

26 <sup>2</sup> The parties dispute whether Friendly personnel asked Woodsford not to discuss 27 the charge and Woodsford's pay cut with other employees at all, as Woodsford claims, 28 or only while at work (Defendant's contention). However, the Court must construe the facts in a light most favorable to Woodsford. Further, all parties agree that Woodsford (fn. cont...)

1 Later in the day on September 15, Woodsford met with Young and Friendly's 2 Controller, Dan Turner. Young and Turner asked Woodsford whether he had discussed 3 his compensation reduction with his co-workers. Woodsford told them that he had 4 spoken with three co-workers about the situation. Young sent Woodsford home.

5 On or about September 16, Friendly suspended Woodsford until October 1 6 without pay. Defendant supplied Woodsford with a suspension notice on September 17 7 outlining its reasons for suspending him (Woodsford later signed the form with the 8 comment "signing under protest[;] see amendment"). (Dkt. no. 23-4 at 16.) The listed 9 reasons for suspending Woodsford were that (1) he violated Young's instruction not to 10 discuss his compensation reduction and the EEOC charge with his co-workers and (2)
11 he informed Friendly management that he no longer trusted or respected them. (Id.)

12 Woodsford returned to work on October 1. He met with Haase and Young at 13 9 a.m. and presented them with an "amendment" to his suspension which stated, among 14 other things, that Woodsford reserved his right to speak with his co-workers about the 15 EEOC charge while they were not working for the purpose of gathering information.
16 (Dkt. no. 23-4 at 18.)

17 Management informed Woodsford that while he was on suspension, his previous 18 position of senior shop foreman was eliminated. Woodsford was offered the position of 19 shop foreman (also held by Woodsford's former subordinate, Dave Jacobs). The shop 20 foreman position consisted of fewer responsibilities and obligations than Woodsford's 21 previous position. The terms of Woodsford's new employment were presented to 22 Woodsford in a three page document and Woodsford was asked to sign on to the terms
23 stated therein. (Dkt. no. 23-4 at 20-22.)

24 Woodsford refused to sign on to the terms of his new job description. At one point 25 during the October 1 meeting, Woodsford asked Haase, "why don't you just fire me?"
26

27 (...fn cont.) spoke to his co-workers while on the job, so the parties' dispute on this issue 28 is of no consequence.

1 and then said, “you don’t have the cojones [Spanish for “balls”] to fire me” (speaking to 2 Haase). Woodsford informed Young and Haase that he needed time to think about the 3 changes before he could return to work. The parties agreed that Woodsford would have 4 until that Friday, October 3, to consider the offered job package.

5 However, later in the day on October 1, Young informed Woodsford that Friendly 6 was rescinding the shop foreman offer and was terminating him. Young told Woodsford 7 that his conduct and statements in that morning’s meeting led to the decision. (Dkt. no.
8 23-4 at 25.)

9 Greg Haase made the ultimate decision to terminate Woodsford. Neither 10 Woodsford’s previous position, senior shop foreman, nor the position offered to him on 11 October 1, shop foreman, were filled. Defendant transferred most of Woodsford’s job 12 duties to Dave Jacobs.

13 Woodsford amended his EEOC charge to include a retaliation claim. The EEOC 14 gave Woodsford a right to sue letter on August 13, 2010. On October 27, 2010, 15 Woodsford filed a complaint in Nevada’s Eighth Judicial District against Defendant 16 alleging disparate treatment and retaliation under the ADEA, 29 U.S.C. § 623(a), (d) and 17 Chapter 613 of the Nevada Revised Statutes.<sup>3</sup> Defendant timely removed to this Court.

18 III. DISCUSSION

19 A. Legal Standard

20 The purpose of summary judgment is to avoid unnecessary trials when there is no
21 dispute as to the facts before the court. Nw. Motorcycle Ass’n v. U.S. Dep’t of Agric., 18 22 F.3d 1468, 1471 (9th Cir. 1994). Summary judgment is appropriate when the pleadings, 23 the discovery and disclosure materials on file, and any affidavits “show there is no 24 genuine issue as to any material fact and that the movant is entitled to judgment as a 25

26 <sup>3</sup> The Court analyzes the state and federal claims jointly because the relevant 27 statutes are nearly identical and the Nevada Supreme Court tends to follow and apply 28 federal case law on the subject. See, e.g., Apeceche v. White Pine Co., 615 P.2d 975,726 (Nev. 1980).

1 matter of law.” Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 330 (1986). An issue is “genuine” 2 if there is a sufficient evidentiary basis on which a reasonable fact-finder could find for 3 the nonmoving party and a dispute is “material” if it could affect the outcome of the suit 4 under the governing law. Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 248-49 (1986).
5 Where reasonable minds could differ on the material facts at issue, however, summary 6 judgment is not appropriate. Warren v. City of Carlsbad, 58 F.3d 439, 441 (9th Cir.
7 1995), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1171 (1996). “The amount of evidence necessary to raise 8 a genuine issue of material fact is enough ‘to require a jury or judge to resolve the 9 parties’ differing versions of the truth at trial.’” Aydin Corp. v. Loral Corp., 718 F.2d 897, 10 902 (9th Cir. 1983) (quoting First Nat’l Bank v. Cities Service Co., 391 U.S. 253, 288-89 11 (1968)). In evaluating a summary judgment motion, a court views all facts and draws all 12 inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. Kaiser Cement Corp. v.
13 Fishbach & Moore, Inc., 793 F.2d 1100, 1103 (9th Cir. 1986).

14 The moving party bears the burden of showing that there are no genuine issues 15 of material fact. Zoslaw v. MCA Distrib. Corp., 693 F.2d 870, 883 (9th Cir. 1982). “In 16 order to carry its burden of production, the moving party must either produce evidence 17 negating an essential element of the nonmoving party’s claim or defense or show that 18 the nonmoving party does not have enough evidence of an essential element to carry its 19 ultimate burden of persuasion at trial.” Nissan Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Fritz Cos., 210
20 F.3d 1099, 1102 (9th Cir. 2000). Once the moving party satisfies Rule 56’s 21 requirements, the burden shifts to the party resisting the motion to “set forth specific 22 facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial.” Anderson, 477 U.S. at 256. The 23 nonmoving party “may not rely on denials in the pleadings but must produce specific 24 evidence, through affidavits or admissible discovery material, to show that the dispute 25 exists,” Bhan v. NME Hosps., Inc., 929 F.2d 1404, 1409 (9th Cir. 1991), and “must do 26 more than simply show that there is some metaphysical doubt as to the material facts.”
27 Orr v. Bank of America, 285 F.3d 764, 783 (9th Cir. 2002) (internal citations omitted).

1 “The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the plaintiff’s position will be 2 insufficient.” Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252.

3 B. Disparate Treatment

4 Plaintiff argues that several of Defendant’s decisions regarding his employment 5 constitute disparate treatment: (1) the reduction in compensation; (2) the suspension; 6 (3) the demotion; and (4) the termination. The Court grants Defendant’s motion for 7 summary judgment regarding all of these claims.

8 “In order to establish a disparate treatment claim, the plaintiff must produce 9 evidence that gives rise to an inference of unlawful discrimination, either through direct 10 evidence of discriminatory intent or through the burden shifting framework set forth in 11 McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green.” Vasquez v. County of Los Angeles, 349 F.3d 634, 12 640 (9th Cir.2003); see also Shelley v. Geren, 666 F.3d 599, 608 (9th Cir. 2012) (holding 13 that the McDonnell Douglas framework is still applicable to motions for summary 14 judgment on ADEA claims after the Supreme Court’s decision in Gross v. FBL Financial 15 Servs., Inc., 557 U.S. 167, 176 (2009)). “Under this framework, the employee must first 16 establish a prima facie case of age discrimination.” Diaz v. Eagle Produce Ltd. P’ship, 17 521 F.3d 1201, 1207 (9th Cir. 2008) (internal citations omitted). “If the employee has 18 justified a presumption of discrimination, the burden shifts to the employer to articulate a 19 legitimate, non-discriminatory reason for its adverse employment action.” Id. “If the 20 employer satisfies its burden, the employee must then prove that the reason advanced 21 by the employer constitutes mere pretext for unlawful discrimination.” Id. Further, to 22 successfully establish an ADEA disparate treatment claim, the plaintiff must prove that 23 age was the “but-for” cause of the employer’s adverse decision. Gross, 557 U.S. at 176
24 (“the ordinary meaning of the ADEA’s requirement that an employer took adverse action 25 ‘because of’ age is that age was the ‘reason’ that the employer decided to act.”)

1                   1. Defendant’s Decision to Reduce Woodsford’s Compensation

2                   a. Prima Facie Case

3                   i. Direct Evidence<sup>4</sup>

4           Woodsford provides two pieces of potentially discriminatory evidence, both 5 occurring in 2008 before Defendant’s decision to reduce his compensation: first, Olliges 6 asked him when he planned on retiring,<sup>5</sup> and second, Haase and Olliges asked him if he 7 was collecting social security benefits (dkt. no. 23-2 at 6).

8           “Direct evidence is evidence which, if believed, proves the fact of discriminatory 9 animus without inference or presumption.” Godwin v. Hunt Wesson, Inc., 150 F.3d 10 1217, 1221 (9th Cir. 1998) (citation omitted). In the context of an ADEA claim, direct 11 evidence “is defined as evidence of conduct or statements by persons involved in the 12 decision-making process that may be viewed as directly reflecting the alleged 13 discriminatory attitude sufficient to permit the fact finder to infer that that attitude was 14 more likely than not a motivating factor in the employer’s decision.” Enlow v. Salem- 15 Keizer Yellow Cab Co., Inc., 389 F.3d 802, 812 (9th Cir. 2004) (citation, internal 16 quotation marks, and ellipses omitted).

17           The remarks made to Woodsford by Olliges and Haase were not onerous enough 18 to constitute direct evidence of age discrimination. In general, “stray remarks” are 19 insufficient to establish discrimination. Merrick v. Farmers Ins. Grp., 892 F.2d 1434, 20 1438 (9th Cir. 1990) (citations omitted); see also Rose v. Wells Fargo & Co., 902 F.2d 21 1417, 1420-21 (9th Cir.1990) (use of the phrase “old-boy network” did not support 22 inference of discriminatory motive). For example, in Shorette v. Rite Aid of Maine, 155 23 F.3d 8, 13 (1st Cir. 1998), a manager asked the plaintiff how old he was and when he

25           <sup>4</sup> “When a plaintiff alleges disparate treatment based on direct evidence in an 26 ADEA claim, [courts] do not apply the [McDonnell-Douglas] burden-shifting analysis . .
27 ..”) Enlow v. Salem-Keizer Yellow Cab Co., Inc., 389 F.3d 802, 812 (9th Cir. 2004).

28           <sup>5</sup> Woodsford incorrectly asserts that this constitutes circumstantial evidence. (Dkt.
no. 25 at 20).

1 planned on retiring. The First Circuit called this a “textbook example of an isolated 2 remark which demonstrates nothing.” Id.

3 b. Circumstantial Evidence

4 A plaintiff can establish a prima facie case of disparate treatment under the ADEA 5 with circumstantial evidence by demonstrating that he was (1) a member of the protected 6 class (at least age 40); (2) performing his job satisfactorily; (3) subject to an adverse 7 employment decision; and (4) either replaced by a substantially younger employee with 8 equal or inferior qualifications or that there were circumstances otherwise “giving rise to 9 an inference of age discrimination.” Coleman v. Quaker Oats Co., 232 F.3d 1271, 1281
10 (9th Cir. 2000).<sup>6</sup>

11 Woodsford can establish a prima facie case. He was 67 years old at the time of 12 the alleged discrimination, there is no evidence of unsatisfactory performance before 13 Defendant’s August 29 decision to alter Woodsford’s compensation, and the August 29 14 pay cut constitutes an adverse employment action. See Ray v. Henderson, 217 F.3d 15 1234, 1241 (9th Cir. 2000) (noting that the Ninth Circuit takes an “expansive view of the 16 type of actions that can be considered adverse employment actions,” and that such 17 “employment actions include demotions, disadvantageous transfers or assignments, 18 refusals to promote, unwarranted negative job evaluations and toleration of harassment 19 by other employees.” (citation omitted)).

20 c. Defendant’s Non-Discriminatory Business Reason

21 Defendant’s proffered non-discriminatory legitimate business reason was its need 22 to make cuts during the 2008 economic downturn. To that end, Friendly sought to 23 reduce costs in the service department, and claims that it reduced Woodsford’s 24 compensation accordingly. An economic downturn is a legitimate, non-discriminatory 25

26
27 <sup>6</sup> In this instance, element (4) is not at issue because Woodsford kept all of his 28 duties.

1 reason for making an adverse business decision. See Fu v. Walker Parking
2 Consultants, 796 F. Supp. 2d 1148, 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2011).

3 d. Pretext

4 “Circumstantial evidence of pretext must be specific and substantial in order to 5 survive summary judgment.” Bergene v. Salt River Project Agr. Imp. and Power Dist., 6 272 F.3d 1136, 1142 (9th Cir. 2001). “A showing that the [employer] treated similarly 7 situated employees outside [the plaintiff’s] protected class more favorably [is] probative 8 of pretext.”

9 The parties dispute whether Woodsford was treated differently than similarly-10 situated employees. Woodsford argues that Friendly treated him differently than 11 similarly-situated managers while Defendant argues that there were no similarly-situated 12 employees to Woodsford; rather, he was in an employee class of his own.

13 There were four employees at Friendly Ford who were paid off of the “pay line”– 14 paid a percentage of the selling gross of the parts and service departments. (Dkt. no.
15 28-1 at 24-25.) Woodsford was the oldest of these employees and the only one who 16 had his pay reduced. Defendant argues that none of these employees were similarly 17 situated to Woodsford, primarily because, out of the four managers, Haase controlled 18 only Woodsford’s pay. (Dkt. No. 28-1 at 26.) Plaintiff does not dispute that Haas made 19 the decision to reduce his pay.

20 “In order to show that the ‘employees’ allegedly receiving more favorable 21 treatment are similarly situated . . . the individuals seeking relief must demonstrate, at 22 the least, that they are similarly situated to those employees in all material respects.” 23 Moran v. Selig, 447 F.3d 748, 755 (9th Cir. 2006). “[I]ndividuals are similarly situated 24 when they have similar jobs and display similar conduct.” Vasquez, 349 F.3d at 641.

25 Woodsford was not similarly situated to the two men in the parts department who 26 were paid off the pay line, Rob Mancini and Jason Gonzales. They did not work in the 27 same department as Woodsford and their compensation does not relate to Haase’s goal 28 and stated reason for reducing Woodsford’s pay – cutting department costs. Nor was 1 Woodsford similarly situated to Haase. Whether or not Haase and Woodsford were 2 similarly situated is admittedly a closer question. Woodsford and Haase were both in 3 management and both worked in the service department. Haase could have made the 4 decision to decrease both Woodsford's salary and his own. However, Haase was 5 Woodsford's manager, and "[e]mployees in supervisory positions are generally deemed 6 not to be similarly situated to lower level employees." Vasquez, 349 F.3d at 641. This is 7 not a steadfast rule; the "critical question is whether the plaintiff and the other employee 8 are similarly situated in all material aspects." Bowden v. Potter, 308 F. Supp. 2d 1108, 9 1117 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (citations omitted, emphasis in original). Haase and Woodsford 10 had different levels of seniority and performed different roles. While Woodsford ran the 11 service shop, Haase oversaw the service department, and it was Haase's job to perform 12 research about the financial health of that department and make decisions accordingly.

13 The Court finds that the two were not "similarly situated."

14 Further, Defendant presents additional evidence that Woodsford's compensation 15 was reduced because of an economic downturn and not because of age. First, Friendly 16 was experiencing a downturn in business at the time it reduced Woodsford's 17 compensation. To that end, it laid off fifteen employees earlier in 2008. Second, Haase
18 conducted a survey and came to the conclusion that Friendly paid Woodsford 19 significantly more than other shop foremen working in the Las Vegas area. Third, Haase
20 had previously informed Woodsford that management costs in the service department 21 were too high. Finally, in previous years, Jerry Penland, Haase's predecessor, told 22 Woodsford and Haase that management costs in the service department were too high.
23 Essentially, Friendly argues that it was experiencing a drastic downturn in business, and 24 made the decision to cut the compensation of one highly overpaid employee.

25 Woodsford counters that it makes "no sense" to "put the entire burden of cutting 26 management costs on the oldest manager and not to reduce the younger manager[s'] 27 [pay] at all." (Dkt. no. 25 at 24.) "[T]he quality of [an employer's] business judgment is 28 only relevant insofar as it suggests that his decisions were explainable only as the

1 product of illegal discrimination.” See Coghlan v. Am. Seafoods Co. LLC., 413 F.3d
2 1090, 1099 (9th Cir. 2005). The circumstances surrounding Woodsford’s pay decrease 3 could potentially lead a juror to determine that Woodsford’s age was one factor in 4 Friendly’s decision. Haase made the decision to cut the pay of a long-time employee 5 who had worked his way up the ranks, and who had previously told his co-workers that 6 he was planning on retiring at 66. Rather, during the midst of an economic downturn, he 7 informed his employers that he no longer planned on retiring in the foreseeable future.
8 Instead of asking Woodsford to make additional cuts in his department or working to 9 reduce management costs by making more modest decreases across management, 10 Haase decreased only Woodsford’s commission. He decreased it by one percentage 11 point, a decrease in pay which both parties agree was approximately 40% of 12 Woodsford’s compensation before the reduction. These circumstances could potentially 13 lead a juror to conclude that Friendly made such a significant cut to Woodsford, and 14 Woodsford alone (out of the managers), in order to induce him to retire or quit, as 15 Plaintiff argues. (Dkt. no. 25 at 31.) However, while such evidence would potentially 16 suffice under a mixed-motives theory of discrimination, Defendant’s evidence supporting 17 its non-discriminatory reason for cutting Woodsford’s pay, coupled with the fact that 18 there is no evidence of Woodsford’s being treated differently than similarly-situated 19 employees, does not suffice under the but-for standard. See Gross, 557 U.S. at 176.
20 Because of the substantial evidence that Friendly’s decision was guided by economic 21 considerations rather than purely age-based ones, no reasonable juror could determine 22 that but for Woodsford’s age Friendly would not have reduced his compensation.

23 2. Defendant’s Decisions to Suspend, Demote, and Terminate 24 Woodsford

25 To the extent that Woodsford argues that Defendant’s decisions to suspend, 26 demote, and/or terminate him constitute disparate treatment, the Court also grants 27 summary judgment in Defendant’s favor. Woodsford cannot establish a prima facie case 28 of disparate treatment for these claims. Here, Defendant’s disciplinary actions are prima

1 facie evidence of disparate treatment if Woodsford can establish that he was (1) in the 2 protected class; (2) performing his job satisfactorily;<sup>7</sup> (3) subject to an adverse 3 employment decision; and (4) that the circumstances surrounding the employment 4 decisions gave rise to an inference of discrimination. See Sorbo v. United Parcel Serv., 5 432 F.3d 1169, 1173 (10th Cir. 2005) (noting that in cases involving an employer's 6 disciplinary actions, the requirement that plaintiff be treated differently than similarly-7 situated employees is an outmoded, often inapplicable requirement).

8 Woodsford cannot satisfy the fourth element. There are no other circumstances 9 giving rise to an inference of age discrimination here. Defendant's decision to suspend, 10 demote, and terminate Woodsford were disciplinary actions, allegedly relating to his 11 decisions to file an EEOC charge and discuss the charge with his co-workers. They 12 were not associated with anything else. These claims therefore relate to Defendant's 13 alleged retaliation against Woodsford for opposing Defendant's actions, and not to the 14 original instance of alleged discrimination. See 44 Am. Jur. Proof of Facts 3d 79 (1997) 15 ("A claim of retaliation will lie for adverse employment action taken as a result of the 16 plaintiff's efforts to document that the employer engaged in age discrimination"). The 17 Court therefore grants summary judgment on these claims.

18 C. Retaliation

19 The Court denies the motion regarding Woodsford's retaliation claims. There 20 exists a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Defendant's decisions to suspend, 21 demote, and terminate Woodsford constitute unlawful retaliation under the ADEA.

22
23
24 <sup>7</sup> Defendant argues that Woodsford was not performing his job satisfactorily 25 during the time Defendant made the decisions to suspend, demote, and terminate 26 Woodsford. Insofar as this argument relates to Woodsford's suspension, Defendants 27 argue that Woodsford's performance was unsatisfactory because he spoke with fellow 28 employees about his EEOC charge while on the job. As discussed in detail below, there is a genuine issue of material fact as to whether Woodsford's conversations were of a type protected by the ADEA. It would contradict the spirit of the Act to allow an employer to use the fact that a plaintiff engaged in protected activity as evidence of sub-par job performance.

1 Courts utilize the same 3-part burden-shifting test in ADEA retaliation cases and 2 ADEA disparate impact cases. Ray, 217 F.3d at 1240.

3 1. Woodsford's Sept. 16 Suspension and Subsequent Demotion

4 a. Prima Facie Case

5 To establish a claim of retaliation, a plaintiff must prove that (1) he engaged in a 6 protected activity; (2) he suffered an adverse employment action; and (3) there was a 7 causal link between the plaintiff's protected activity and the adverse employment action.
8 Poland v. Chertoff, 494 F.3d 1174, 1179-80 (9th Cir. 2007).

9 There are two types of protected activities under 29 U.S.C. § 623(d): opposing 10 any practice made unlawful by the section (the "opposition clause") or filing a charge or 11 otherwise participating in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or litigation under 12 the ADEA (the "filing and participating" clause). 29 U.S.C. § 623(d). For the purposes of 13 this motion, Defendant does not contest that Woodsford can establish a prima facie case 14 under the participation clause because of the temporal proximity between Woodsford's 15 filing of the EEOC charge and Defendant's adverse employment actions. (Dkt. no. 23 at 16 16.) However, the parties dispute whether Woodsford's discussions with his co-workers 17 regarding the charge constitute protected opposition to discrimination. In one sense, it is 18 inconsequential whether Woodsford's conversations are protected: the parties agree for 19 the purposes of this motion that Plaintiff can establish a prima facie case under the "filing 20 and participating clause," so the burden shifts to Defendant to prove that it had a 21 legitimate business reason for its disciplinary actions. However, whether or not 22 Woodsford's conversations are protected by the ADEA relates to the second stage of the 23 McDonnell-Douglas burden-shifting analysis. Defendant's stated non-discriminatory 24 reason for suspending and demoting Woodsford is his "insubordinate behavior," and the 25 conversations are Defendant's evidence of such behavior. If these conversations are 26 protected under the ADEA, they do not constitute insubordinate behavior, and are not a 27 legitimate reason for Defendant's adverse employment decisions. Thus, the Court 28 considers whether Woodsford's conversations with his employees are protected under the Act here. For the reasons stated below, the Court holds that a reasonable juror could find that Woodsford's activity constitutes protected opposition.

i. Protected Activity

Defendant argues that Woodsford was not engaging in a protected activity under the opposition clause when he spoke to non-management Friendly employees while on the job in violation of Defendant's instructions not to do so. The Ninth Circuit uses a balancing test to determine whether an employee's conduct constitutes a "protected activity" under the ADEA. O'Day v. McDonnell Douglas Helicopter Co., 79 F.3d 756, 763 (9th Cir. 1996). "The court must balance the purpose of the Act to protect persons engaging reasonably in activities opposing . . . discrimination, against Congress' equally manifest desire not to tie the hands of employers in the objective selection and control of personnel." Id. (Internal quotation marks omitted.) "An employee's opposition activity is protected only if it is reasonable in view of the employer's interest in maintaining a harmonious and efficient operation." Id. (Internal quotation marks omitted.)

Friendly's instruction to Woodsford contradicts the plain language of 29 U.S.C. § 623(d):

Opposition to unlawful practices; participation in investigations, proceedings, or litigation

It shall be unlawful for an employer to discriminate against any of his employees . . . because such individual, member or applicant for membership has opposed any practice made unlawful by this section, or because such individual, member or applicant for membership has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or litigation under this chapter.

(Emphasis added.) "Opposing" an unlawful action encompasses speaking to fellow employees about a charge filed in opposition to the alleged discrimination. Further, the EEOC compliance manual lists: "[a] complaint or protest about alleged employment discrimination to a . . . co-worker," as an "example of opposition." 1 EEOC Compl. Man.

§ 8.2(2) (June 1, 2006).<sup>8</sup> The Court cannot condone an employer's "gag order" on all discrimination-related workplace conversation. To do so would be detrimental to plaintiffs' attempts to preserve evidence for their case. See O'Day, 79 F.3d at 763. It could also produce a chilling effect that deters employees with meritorious claims from bringing discrimination suits.

While conversing with fellow employees about an EEOC charge is protected under the ADEA, the Act does not protect such conversation when it becomes disruptive to the workplace. The ADEA does not safeguard an employee "when he violates legitimate company rules, knowingly disobeys company orders, disrupts the work environment of his employer, or willfully interferes with the attainment of the employer's goals." Unt v. Aerospace Corp., 765 F.2d 1440, 1446 (9th Cir. 1985). And an employee may not "disrupt workplace relations as a form of protected 'opposition' of the alleged discrimination and then try to capitalize on the deserved discipline that the employer consequentially imposes." Garner v. Motorola, Inc., 95 F. Supp. 2d 1069, 1080 (D. Ariz. 2000) aff'd sub nom. Garner v. Motorola Inc., 33 F. App'x 880 (9th Cir. 2002); see also 1 EEOC Compl. Man. § 8.2 (3)(a) ("The manner in which an individual protests perceived employment discrimination must be reasonable in order for the anti-retaliation provisions to apply. In applying a 'reasonableness' standard, courts and the Commission balance the right of individuals to oppose employment discrimination and the public's interest in enforcement of the EEO laws against an employer's need for a stable and productive work environment").

A genuine issue of material fact exists as to whether Woodsford's conversations with his co-workers about his EEOC charge were so disruptive in nature that they fall outside the ADEA's protection. Woodsford spoke to three co-workers about his charge

<sup>8</sup> Defendant told Woodsford that his plans to "talk to [his] co-workers to gather evidence and information about [his] EEOC charge" was "clearly unacceptable," and listed this plan as one of the reasons for Woodsford's termination. But employees have "a legitimate interest in preserving evidence of" an employer's "unlawful employment practices." O'Day, 79 F.3d at 763.

on September 15 – Alberto Gonzales, Cruz Arellano, and Frank Mohr. (Dkt. no. 25-2 at 44.) Although Woodsford told his superiors at Friendly that his reduction in compensation and the EEOC charge were “absolutely everybody’s business,” and that he was going to tell the whole company about it, there is no evidence that he spoke with anyone other than management and Gonzales, Arellano, and Mohr. Further, there is no evidence that Woodsford’s conversations with his co-workers were disruptive in nature. Defendants do not present evidence that the conversations were overly numerous, loud, or made during particularly inopportune moments (e.g., during a meeting or when the employees were with customers). In fact, Woodsford states that he spoke with them while they were on break (dkt. no. 25-1 at 10). Woodsford’s actions are far less disruptive than that of plaintiffs in cases where courts have found disruptive behavior. For example, in Garner, the court found that the plaintiff’s disruptive on-the-job activity, which included “missing a week of work due to a Driving Under the Influence charge,” arriving to work late, failing to meet deadlines, producing unsatisfactory work product, and sending sarcastic emails (among other actions) were not protected activities under § 623(d). Garner, 95 F. Supp. 2d at 1079. And in O’Day, the court found that a plaintiff “rummaging through his supervisor’s office for confidential documents,” copying those documents, and then showing them to another co-worker who had been slated to be laid-off was on balance too disruptive to constitute protected behavior. 79 F.3d at 763; see also Hellman v. Weisberg, No. 06-1465, 2007 WL 4218973, at *5 (D. Ariz. Dec. 3, 2007) aff’d, 360 F. App’x 776 (9th Cir. 2009) (plaintiff’s release of confidential memoranda in violation of employee obligations was not a “protected activity” under Title VII).

ii. Adverse Employment Decision and Causal Link

At the prima facie stage, the causal link element is construed broadly, Poland, 494 F.3d at 1181 n. 2, and, in some cases, causation may be inferred “from timing alone where an adverse employment action follows on the heels of protected activity.” Villiarimo v. Aloha Island Air, Inc., 281 F.3d 1054, 1065 (9th Cir. 2002). This is such a

1 case. Defendant suspended Woodsford on or about September 17, and subsequently 2 demoted him.<sup>9</sup> The temporal proximity between the adverse employment actions – all of 3 which occurred during the two weeks after Defendant’s learning of the EEOC charge – is 4 sufficient evidence to establish causation here.

5 b. Defendant’s Non-Retaliatory Purpose

6 Defendant must “offer a legitimate, non-discriminatory explanation” for 7 Woodsford’s suspension and demotion. Diaz, 521 F.3d at 1211. “The defendant need 8 not persuade the court that it was actually motivated by the proffered reasons, but it is 9 sufficient if the defendant’s evidence raises a genuine issue of fact as to whether it 10 discriminated against the plaintiff.” Texas Dept. of Cmty. Affairs v. Burdine, 450 U.S.
 11 248, 254 (1981). However, the “explanation provided must be legally sufficient to justify 12 a judgment for the defendant.” Id. at 255.

13 Defendant’s proffered non-retaliatory reason was Woodsford’s “insubordinate 14 behavior.” (Dkt. no. 23 at 16.)<sup>10</sup> Insubordination is generally a legitimate, non-15 discriminatory reason for an adverse employment decision. See Payne v. Norwest
 16 Corp., 113 F.3d 1079, 1080 (9th Cir. 1997). The two potentially insubordinate activities
 17 Defendant argues Woodsford took part in before its decisions to suspend and demote 18

19 <sup>9</sup> Defendant offered Woodsford the position of shop foreman, transferred away 20 many of his job duties, and revoked a number of privileges. (“Bob Woodsford’s New Job 21 Description,” dkt. no. 25-2, at 46-48.) Each of these adverse employment actions is 22 actionable under the ADEA. Defendant presented Woodsford with each of these 23 adverse employment decisions in a single employment package on the morning of October 1, and Woodsford’s objections and subsequent actions were made in response to the package as a whole. For the purposes of deciding summary judgment, the Court labels the entire October 1 employment package as Woodsford’s “demotion.”

24 <sup>10</sup> Defendant briefly discusses Woodsford’s compensation as another reason for 25 demoting him (“[b]ecause of the reduction in his pay plan, some of Woodsford’s 26 extraneous duties were eliminated . . .”). (Dkt. no. 23 at 8, ¶ 26.) But this reason plainly 27 cannot survive the pretext stage of the analysis, because when Woodsford was originally 28 told his compensation was reduced, he was also told his duties would remain the same.
 It was not until Woodsford filed the EEOC charge and spoke to co-workers about his charge that Friendly demoted him. These actions suffice to create a genuine issue of material fact regarding whether or not demoting Woodsford to make his duties in-line with his compensation was a mere pretext for retaliation.

1 Woodsford were that (1) Woodsford spoke with co-workers about his EEOC charge and 2 (2) Woodsford stated that he no longer trusted or respected management. (Dkt. no. 23 3 at 16; Dkt. no 25-2 at 53.) Woodsford admits that he spoke with co-workers about his 4 charge on the job, but disputes that he ever told Friendly management he did not trust or 5 respect them. Because “a court views all facts and draws all inferences in the light most 6 favorable to the nonmoving party,” the Court therefore only considers the conversations.
7 See Kaiser, 793 F.2d at 1103. Yet as mentioned, such conversations with co-workers, 8 so long as they are not overly disruptive to the workplace, are protected under the 9 ADEA. Such ADEA-protected behavior cannot be defined as insubordination.
10 Woodsford’s suspension and demotion were not guided by a legitimate, non-retaliatory 11 purpose. These two claims therefore survive summary judgment.

12 2. Woodsford’s Oct. 1 Termination

13 For the same reasons stated in section (C)(1)(a) above, a reasonable juror could 14 find that the temporal proximity between Woodsford’s filing of the EEOC charge and 15 Defendant’s terminating him establish a prima facie case of retaliation.

16 Further, Defendant’s given reason for terminating Woodsford is legitimate. As 17 mentioned, an employee’s insubordinate behavior is generally a legitimate, non-18 discriminatory reason for an adverse employment decision. See Payne, 113 F.3d at 19 1080. Here, unlike the behavior that prompted Defendant to suspend and demote 20 Woodsford, Woodsford’s behavior during the October 1 meeting – his heated words with 21 Haase and Young and his refusal to sign the new terms of employment – is not 22 protected by the ADEA. Defendant’s reason for terminating Woodsford is therefore 23 legally sufficient.

24 The burden shifts back to Woodsford to establish that Defendant’s claim that it 25 terminated him for his insubordinate behavior was a pretext for retaliation. A Plaintiff 26 must present “very little evidence” of pretext to survive summary judgment. Stegall v.
27 Citadel Broad. Co., 350 F.3d 1061, 1072 (9th Cir. 2003). “Because motivations are often 28 difficult to ascertain, such an inquiry should be left to the trier of fact since impermissible

1 motives are often easily masked behind a complex web of post hoc rationalizations.”
2 Reece v. Pocatello/Chubbuck Sch. Dist. No. 25, 713 F. Supp. 2d 1222, 1231 (D. Idaho 3 2010) (citations and quotation marks omitted).

4 Woodsford has produced enough evidence for a reasonable juror to conclude that 5 retaliation was the but-for reason for Woodsford’s termination. See Smith v. Xerox, 602 6 F.3d 320, 328 (5th Cir. 2010) (finding that the but-for causation standard applies to 7 retaliation under the ADEA). A reasonable juror could determine that Defendant was 8 attempting to use Woodsford’s demotion to goad a negative, disruptive reaction out of 9 him and essentially provide Friendly with a legitimate reason for terminating Woodsford.
10 At 9:00 a.m. on Woodsford’s first day back from a two-week disciplinary suspension, 11 Friendly presented Woodsford with a significant demotion – he would have fewer duties 12 and responsibilities, and would now share his post with a former subordinate. Further, 13 Defendant made Woodsford sign a document stating that the long-time employee and 14 former manager was not only being demoted but also had to surrender his keys and 15 company cell phone, was no longer trusted with Friendly’s safe combination, had to 16 clock in and out, and lost other similar privileges. (Dkt. no. 23-4 at 22.) Coupled with 17 the fact that Woodsford had recently filed an EEOC charge against Defendant, a 18 reasonable juror could determine that the circumstances surrounding Woodsford’s 19 termination demonstrate that Defendant purposefully backed Woodsford into a corner: it 20 attempted to anger Woodsford, then use this reaction against him by giving Friendly a 21 legitimate reason to terminate Woodsford. Merely because discriminatory retaliation 22 must be the “but for” reason for an adverse employment decision does not give an 23 employer carte blanche to pile on suspensions, demotions, and other adverse 24 employment actions in order to illicit a negative reaction out of the plaintiff and then use 25 this reaction against him.

26 Other evidence could lead a juror to find that Defendant’s reason for terminating 27 Woodsford was pretextual. Defendant did not have a clear employment policy defining 28 insubordination. This is therefore unlike cases where employers had a policy that placed

1 employees on notice that certain behavior would lead to disciplinary action. See, e.g., 2 McGill v. Munoz, 203 F.3d 843, 847 (D.D.C. 2000). The lack of such a policy could lead 3 a reasonable juror to believe that Defendant's proffered non-retaliatory business reason 4 was a post-hoc rationalization for terminating Woodsford. Finally, the fact that 5 Defendant waited until later in the day on October 1 to terminate Woodsford, and did not 6 terminate him when the potentially insubordinate behavior occurred or directly afterwards
7 could lead a reasonable juror to find that Defendant's decision to label Woodsford's 8 behavior was mere pretext for retaliation.

9 IV. CONCLUSION

10 Accordingly, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendant's motion for summary 11 judgment is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part as follows:

- 12 • The Court grants the motion regarding each of Plaintiff's claims of age 13 discrimination;
- 14 • The motion is denied regarding Plaintiff's retaliation claims.

15 ENTERED THIS 27th day of June 2012.
